Preface

Common standards for sixteen-year olds? A meeting to discuss the setting up of common-standards in mathematics throughout the European Union. As a President of the Swedish mathematical Society, I have been invited. Always eager to travel, and besides, having recently engaged myself in a fight against didactics people, I seize the opportunity.

It turns out to be an extended week-end. I book tickets via Bruxelles, initially with the intention of meeting an old acquaintance, but as that falls through, I will have the opportunity of a base, and some additional sight-seeing. As it turns out, I will avail myself of the opportunity to go to Antwerp.

The trip is once again documented in great, not to say tedious detail, for which I, as always, make no apologies.

Göteborg

December 3
2001